1. Following is a summary of information which has been reported to us by CARBO-NITRATE concerning the divorce and termination of CARGARANA 2 since the transmission of Reference dispatch. It is being forwarded for your information, although you may already be familiar with some or all of the matters covered.

After CARGARANA had agreed to confess to fictitious "Shawidrigs Beziehungen", in order to aid in CARGARANA 2's divorce action, CARGARANA 2 wrote her mother-in-law that she intends to leave for the United States in July of this year, without regard to whether or not she has secured a divorce by that time. CARGARANA wrote his lawyer, however, that he objected to his son's emigration to the United States with CARGARANA 2 and requested his lawyer to take all possible steps to prevent the son's emigration. CARGARANA added that he desired that his son be cared for by the son's grandmother, CARGARANA's mother. CARGARANA 2 then wrote CARGARANA's lawyer of her desire and intention that her son accompany her on her trip to the United States in July. CARGARANA's lawyer thereupon sent three letters, as follows:

A. To CARGARANA 2's lawyers, stating that CARGARANA was opposed to his son's leaving Germany with CARGARANA 2.

B. To the Frankfurt police, requesting them to prevent CARGARANA's son from leaving Germany.

C. To CARGARANA by way of the warden, stating that CARGARANA's mother was willing to assume responsibility for the care of her grandson.

2. CARBONITRATE states that the key to CARGARANA's objections to his son's emigration from Germany lies in his fear that the son may be given or assume another name after he arrives in the United States, and that as a result it would be impossible for CARGARANA to find his boy after his release from prison.

3. The information reported above points up two questions of possible importance to HARVARD: (a) Would the son's emigration from Germany be barred as a matter of German law by CARGARANA's objections thereto?, and (b) would the son's immigration into the United States be barred as a matter of American law by CARGARANA's objections thereto? If the answer to either of these questions is in the affirmative,

HARVARD might wish to examine the possibility of inducing CARGARANA 2 to leave her son with her mother-in-law in East Berlin, rather than have CARGARANA 2's departure from Germany delayed or prevented by CARGARANA's objections to the child's leaving the country.

4. CARGARANA 2 has recently written to CARBONHYDRATE imploring him to use his influence with CARGARANA's lawyer to secure CARGARANA's agreement to the child's emigration to the United States with her. We will instruct CARBONHYDRATE to reply that he has done everything possible along these lines, but that his efforts have unfortunately gone unrewarded. CARBONHYDRATE will continue that CARGARANA's lawyer has taken the position that he must of course do all that he can to carry out his client's firmly expressed wishes that the son remain in Germany with his grandmother. This is the only reply which is realistic at the moment, since CARBONHYDRATE has of course no means available to persuade CARGARANA to agree to his son's departure. However, we wish to gear any necessary action by us into HARVARD's plans for resettlement and termination of CARGARANA 2 and would appreciate being informed if this action is inconsistent with HARVARD's overall plans.

5. We hope that the above information will prove helpful. A copy of CARGARANA 2's letter to CARBONHYDRATE is being forwarded under separate cover for your retention and disposition.
